

BEING A TENANT (ENGLAND)

Please Note: The Renters' Rights Act 2025 is now law but some changes are planned to be rolled out over 2026 and beyond. This guidance is correct as of the 1st May 2026 and any further changes will be incorporated as and when they are implemented and more detail is available. You may wish to see our blog post on the changes here with a list of frequently asked questions.

Please note: This guidance is only applicable to rental properties in England. Guidance for rental properties in Wales is under Being a Tenant – Wales and Being a Landlord – Wales or you can speak to one of our expert advisors at the legal advice helpline.

Types of tenancy

There has been a significant increase in the availability of private rented property over recent years and therefore an increase in the number of tenants and landlords. As a result, it is increasingly important to know and understand your rights and obligations.

Firstly, it is important to understand and make sure you know the type of arrangement that exists between you as the occupier of the property and the owner. The nature of that arrangement can be dependent on the type of accommodation provided.

The following types of occupation and accommodation (with the exception of council/social housing) do not create a landlord and tenant relationship:

- you live on the premises, and you share some of the rooms such as a bathroom, kitchen or other living space with your landlord, you will not be a tenant. Legally known as an excluded occupier, you will often be referred to as a lodger
- you live in a hostel or bed and breakfast hotel as an occupier. You are likely to fall into the same category as above and be an excluded occupier
- you have been granted a license to occupy which creates an agreement for you to occupy the property for a defined length of time. This is often used for very short stays and, again, you are not a tenant but a licensee

- your employer is providing living accommodation as part of your job and as such you may be a service occupier (if you are required to live in the premises in order to do your job) or tenant. This can be quite a complex area of law and further clarification may be required
- you are living in student halls of residence provided by a college or university, and as such will be an occupier who may qualify for basic protection
- you have been granted a Tenancy at Will (where an occupier is in occupation pursuant to negotiations for a lease). This is a flexible tenancy which is indefinite and continues until either party gives notice bringing the tenancy to an end.

If none of the above applies, the rent is paid to your landlord, and you do not share the premises with them, it is likely you have entered into a more formal tenancy. Even if there is no agreement in writing, you will be a tenant.

The new Assured Periodic Tenancy (APT)

An Assured Shorthold Tenancy has previously been the most widely used type of tenancy, however from the 1st May 2026 all tenancies will become APTs under the Renters Rights Act 2025. Tenancies will then be “rolling” on a periodic basis, and tenants will be able to give 2 months’ notice to end the tenancy at any time, please see below.

Landlord responsibilities

Your landlord has a number of responsibilities and obligations to you as a tenant. These are generally set out in your tenancy agreement and include:

1. Not to disturb tenants

It is sometimes necessary for your landlord to access your property and to undertake repairs. However, you are entitled to live in your property free from any harassment or unnecessary interference. It is usual in standard tenancy agreements for there to be a clause allowing a landlord entry into the property on giving 48 hours' notice to check the condition of the property and/or to effect repairs. If after receiving notice from your landlord (or their agent), you do not want this to happen, perhaps it is not convenient for you, then it is possible to object and your landlord should not then use this clause to gain entry at that time without your consent. You do need to be aware, however, that there are statutory inspections, such as those for gas appliances, which are required, and access should be allowed for that.

Harassment is where your landlord or anyone on his behalf, acts in a manner likely to cause distress or make it difficult for you to remain in the property. If this occurs it is possible to report the matter to the police or local authority.

This does not affect your landlord's right to enter the property without notice if there is an emergency. For example, if there is a burst pipe while the property is empty and emergency access is required to stop the water and prevent further damage.

2. Carry out repairs

Landlords are responsible for most repairs to the exterior or structure of a property and making sure the property is habitable. Therefore, problems with the roof, chimneys, walls, guttering and drains are the responsibility of the landlord. Landlords are also responsible for keeping the equipment for supplying water, gas and electricity in safe working order.

One of the common concerns tenants call us about is issues with damp in the property. See below for more details, but generally your landlord will only be responsible for this where it can be demonstrated that the damp problem is caused by a defect in the fabric of the building and is not lifestyle related. Tenants often have responsibility for some minor repairs and maintenance. This usually relates to:

- internal decorations
- gardens
- small jobs such as changing plugs and lightbulbs
- anything damaged as the result of negligence or willful act

We often receive requests for advice from tenants for such things as damp, the failure of domestic appliances or unwelcome guests, such as mice. Here are some practical points in relation to such matters:

- Check the terms of your tenancy agreement to see whether the matter complained of is referred to.
- Damp generally falls into two categories, lifestyle damp and rising/penetrating damp. Lifestyle damp is caused by insufficient air circulating in the property, i.e. a lack of ventilation to dry clothes or in the bathroom where steam is not allowed to escape. The mould and the damage caused by such damp will generally be the responsibility of the tenant. It is therefore important to ensure that you have sufficient windows open to allow air to circulate. Rising or penetrating damp is likely to be the result of a structural defect and generally be the responsibility of your landlord. If you have concerns about damp and mould it is possible to ask your landlord for a damp survey or contact your local authority.
- Mice and bedbugs are always unwelcome, but we are often consulted on whose responsibility it is to pay for any pest control. Generally mice are found where there is food, so if you leave food lying around it is possible mice will follow. If they are present because of your failure to clear away rubbish, then they will be your responsibility.

With bed bugs if you can show they were present when you moved in then your landlord will be responsible, but if not then it may be your responsibility. It is also necessary to check your tenancy agreement for the need to notify your landlord if such an event occurs. This may be relevant in the event your landlord seeks to recover the costs of dealing with this from your rental deposit. Essentially if there is an existing pest control problem when you move in then the landlord is likely to be responsible.

- Domestic appliances are often part of a rented property and are therefore included in the inventory which is checked at the outset of the tenancy. If the appliance stops working during the course of the tenancy, and this is not due to damage caused by your negligence, it should be repaired by your landlord. If this does not happen, you may want to get some quotes for the cost of the repair and give the landlord the opportunity to arrange the repair before getting it done yourself. If you take this course of action you will need to retain all records of any payments made, to support a claim against the landlord for the cost.

3. Keeping the tenant safe

Your landlord has a common law duty to make sure that your rented home is a safe place to live. This means the property must be free from danger at all times, such as tripping hazards etc. Where you live in a flat, this duty can also extend to the common parts, such as the entrance hall.

There is a Housing Health and Safety Rating System (HHSRS) which applies to rented property and how hazards are assessed. You can find a copy of the guidance here.

In addition to the general duty and responsibility there are specific statutory obligations to:

- provide a gas safety certificate for every gas appliance supplied, renewed annually
- undertake any work recommended by a gas engineer

- ensure any furniture meets the necessary safety requirement e.g. is fire retardant
- ensure any electrical equipment is safe
- have a working smoke detector on each storey of the property and carbon monoxide detector in every room where there is a fuel burning appliance. Failure to do so could lead to a fine of up to £5,000 for the landlord.

Tenancy Formalities

If you enter a new tenancy (APT) there are certain requirements that your landlord must comply with. These are:

- to protect your deposit in an approved scheme within 30 days of the start of the tenancy (a deposit must not exceed 5 months rent)
- to provide prescribed information about the deposit within 30 days of receiving the deposit.

Your landlord must also provide:

- a hard copy or relevant link to a booklet entitled 'How to rent: the checklist for renting in England' which you can find a copy of here
- an energy performance certificate (EPC). An EPC is valid for ten years and you may be able to check the report for your property here
- a current gas safety certificate

Immigration Checks

All landlords must now take evidence of a tenant's immigration status. This means for all occupants of the property over the age of 18 the landlord will require evidence to show you are able to live in the UK. Evidence you may provide to the landlord includes original documents such as a biometric residence permit. You can see here the type of documents which may be required.

These checks are required if you intend to use the property as your main home and the relevant paperwork is required from everyone before the tenancy can start. These checks will be done by your landlord or their agent.

Deposits

A landlord can only request a deposit up to the value of 5 weeks' rent if the annual rent is under £50,000 or 6 weeks' rent if it is over £50,000 per year.

It is a requirement for all landlords taking a deposit from a tenant in relation to an APT to place that deposit with a recognised deposit service.

There are three such services:

- Deposit Protection Service – (Custodial and Insured) (Simply tenancy deposit protection)
- My Deposits Tenancy Deposit Scheme (Deposit protection scheme | Tenancy service for landlords and agents)
- Tenancy Deposit Scheme (TDS | Award-Winning, Government-Approved Tenancy Deposit Protection)

A landlord's duty to protect a tenant's deposit

The deposit must be protected in one of the approved government schemes. Failure by your landlord to do so can have significant consequences. In addition you must also be provided with the prescribed information about the deposit within 30 days of your landlord having received it.

Information a landlord must provide in relation to deposit

Your landlord must provide you with all the information the law requires (known as the prescribed information) within 30 days of receiving your deposit, including:

- your name and contact details
- the amount of deposit received and the address of the tenancy
- details of the tenancy deposit protection scheme you are using
- a copy of the deposit protection certificate signed by you
- information about the purpose of the tenancy deposit protection scheme

- how the tenant gets the deposit back at the end of the tenancy
- what to do if there is a dispute about the deposit

Many landlords use agents to deal with this and the relevant paperwork is often included in the tenancy agreement.

Types of tenancy deposit protection schemes

The two types of tenancy deposit protection schemes are:

Custodial schemes – The landlord or their agent pays the deposit into the scheme, where it will remain until the end of the tenancy

Insurance scheme – The landlord or their agent keeps the tenant's deposit but pays an insurance premium to the scheme. This effectively insures the deposit for future return/loss.

To check whether your deposit is registered you will need to check with each of the deposit schemes using the links above and for this you will need to have details of your postcode, the date the tenancy started and the amount of the deposit paid.

Penalties when a deposit is not protected or is protected late

If your landlord does not follow the correct procedure to protect your deposit, you may apply to the court for compensation of between one and three times the value of the deposit paid.

If your landlord protected the deposit after 30 days of the receipt of the deposit, failed to provide details of the deposit scheme used within 30 days or failed to protect the deposit at all, you can apply to the court during the course of the tenancy or after it has expired for a remedy. A court can also order your landlord to protect a deposit in a suitable scheme.

If this has happened to you there is useful guidance on the Shelter website on what to do next, which you can find here including standard letters and guidance on the relevant court forms to use.

It is worth noting this is not a small claims court process and requires a different procedure called a Part 8 Claim procedure. This is more complex and you may require further guidance.

Return of the deposit at the end of the tenancy

At the end of your tenancy, it will be necessary for the property to be inspected and compared against the inventory which was completed and checked at the outset. The value of items which are missing or damaged due to negligence or misuse may be claimed by the landlord to be deducted from the deposit. Generally, the landlord can only deduct money from the deposit to cover for:

- Unpaid rent
- Damaged property
- Missing items
- Cleaning costs

If there is a disagreement about this the matter will usually be referred to adjudication under the relevant deposit protection rules. You should check with your deposit service how this can be done.

The adjudicator will decide the outcome after receiving representations from both the landlord and the tenant. If you would like to see the type of things which are considered, please click here for some case studies or try being the adjudicator yourself here.

We talk to a lot of callers who are concerned about their deposit and if it will be returned in full. It is generally recommended when you move in and out of the property you take photographs of the condition of the property and the contents for reference purposes but worth noting that it is generally for the landlord to prove damage beyond reasonable wear and tear.

Rent Increases

There may be times when the landlord wants to increase your rent. From May 1st 2026 under the RRA, the landlord is only entitled to increase your rent once per year. The rent increase must also be in line with "fair market rent" in the area. The landlord must serve a s13 notice (example here) to formally increase your rent and this notice period will be 2 months.

If you feel that the rent increase is above fair market rent then it is possible for you to apply to the First Tier Tribunal here to have this assessed. You should be able to provide evidence that the rent increase is unreasonable based on fair market rent, such as letting agent adverts or evidence of rent paid on similar properties in the area. It is important to note that following a tribunal decision in the landlords favour the new rent can be backdated to the end of the s13 notice period and will be payable.

If you want to leave the property

From the 1st May 2026 all tenancies will become statutory periodic tenancies. This means that if you want to leave the property you can give 2 months' notice to the landlord regardless of any fixed term tenancies previously agreed to. This notice will need to be given in line with a rent payment date, so for example if you pay rent on the 1st of the month the notice should end on the last day of the month.

If the landlord wants you to leave the property

Under the RRA, non fault evictions (known as s21 evictions) will be banned. However, there will be a transition period and for s21 notices sent to tenants before the 1st May 2026 the landlord can still apply for possession of the property under the "accelerated possession" procedure, BUT proceedings must be started (the claim must be issued with the court) by the 31st July 2026.

This means that from the 1st May 2026 the landlord will have limited grounds to evict tenants. The Act introduces some new grounds under s8. Please see our dedicated fact sheet on Possession Proceedings for more information.

If you receive an eviction notice you may be entitled to legal aid: find more information here.

Letting agents

We receive frequent calls from tenants who are not happy with the way letting agents deal with them during the tenancy period. In these circumstances it is important to recognise that the agent is acting on behalf of the landlord and as such is employed to protect your landlord's interests.

Most of the complaints concern the delay in getting maintenance and general repairs done in a timely manner. This can be a frustrating experience. Some agents are better than others and we never hear about the good ones. However, it is also the case that some agents have limited authority to deal with small routine matters without the landlord's express authority and this means this type of issue can be dealt with relatively quickly. In other situations, that may not be the case, and with large expenditure items such as a boiler problem, express instructions will be required from the landlord. This means sometimes letting agents are not in a position to deal with matters as you may like. In those circumstances it may be useful to try and contact the landlord direct if you have contact details. It is lawful for a landlord to provide the address of the agent as a contact point and in those circumstances are not obliged to provide any further personal details.

Finally, all the estate agents must belong to one of the following schemes:

- The Property Ombudsman
- The Property Redress Scheme

If you complain to a letting agent and the complaint is not resolved to your satisfaction, you can refer to one of the ombudsman schemes outlined above.

---

NOTE: Please be aware there are links contained within this factsheet that may take you to external sites, we are not responsible for their content. This is a general advice and information factsheet only and should not be treated as a definitive guide and does not constitute legal or professional advice. We are not a law firm and information is not intended to create a solicitor client relationship. Law Express does not accept any responsibility for any loss which may arise from relying on information contained in this factsheet. This is not a substitute for legal advice and specific and personal legal advice should be taken on any individual matter. If you need more details or information about the matters referred to in this factsheet please seek formal legal advice. This factsheet is correct at time of going to print. The law set out in this factsheet applies to England, unless otherwise stated.

Copyright © 2026 by Law Express

All rights reserved. This article or any portion thereof may not be reproduced or used in any manner whatsoever without the express written permission of the publisher.